Brazilian Airline Resolves Foreign Bribery Investigations with Reduced Penalty Based on Inability to Pay

On September 15, 2022, GOL Linha Aereas Inteligentes S.A. ("GOL"), one of Brazil's most prominent airlines, agreed to pay $41.5 million to resolve bribery investigations by DOJ, the SEC, and Brazilian authorities. These resolutions involved allegations that GOL executives bribed prominent Brazilian officials in exchange for the passage of two laws intended to benefit the airline industry.[1]

In another display of the "truly remarkable" cooperation between the United States and Brazil,[2] this case reflects both countries' continued commitment to working together in enforcing their anti-corruption laws. DOJ's resolution, in particular, applied its guidance on calculating appropriate penalties and considering whether to impose monitorships. More broadly, while demonstrating the serious risks posed to companies by insufficient controls, the GOL resolutions exemplify how authorities currently factor cooperation and remediation into their enforcement decisions.

Background

As reported in its SEC filing on May 1, 2017, GOL received inquiries in 2016 from Brazilian tax authorities regarding payments to firms owned by politically exposed persons in Brazil. GOL retained U.S. and Brazilian counsel to conduct an independent investigation. In December 2016, GOL entered into a leniency agreement with the Brazilian Federal Public Ministry, avoiding criminal or civil charges and agreeing to pay a R$12 million fine and improve its compliance program. GOL also paid a R$4.2 million fine to the Brazilian tax authorities and agreed to notify relevant Brazilian and U.S. authorities about the investigation.[3]

According to the criminal information DOJ filed in the District of Maryland earlier in September 2022, GOL conspired to violate the FCPA's anti-bribery and books and records provisions. Specifically, between 2012 and 2013, GOL caused approximately $3.8 million in bribe payments to be made to certain Brazilian officials to secure the passage of two laws that lowered certain payroll and fuel taxes, financially benefiting GOL and other Brazilian airlines.[4] According to Assistant Attorney General Kenneth A. Polite Jr., "the company entered into fraudulent contracts with third-party vendors for the purpose of generating and concealing the funds necessary to perpetrate this criminal conduct, and then falsely recorded the sham payments in their own books."[5]

The SEC similarly found that a GOL director committed to pay approximately $5.4 million in bribes to Brazilian politicians in order to ensure passage of legislation that financially benefitted GOL.[6] According to the SEC, between October 2012 and 2013, GOL, through the GOL director, paid the equivalent of $1.14 million in bribes to a Brazilian official who helped ensure the inclusion of the air transport industry in legislation significantly lowering payroll taxes.[7] These bribes were paid through at least two companies that the Brazilian official controlled and characterized as legitimate advertisement expenses.

As reflected in the SEC's order, GOL also paid almost $1 million in bribes to close associates of the Brazilian official and a company associated with a Brazilian legislator.[8] GOL recorded all these payments as legitimate expenses for services, even though the services were never rendered. In 2013, GOL, through the GOL director, also paid $552,400 in bribes to a former Brasilia official who influenced the passage of legislation that lowered Brasilia's aviation fuel tax by more than half. GOL similarly recorded these payments as fees for services that were never rendered.[9]

"Anti-bribery violations need not involve payments to government officials in exchange for particular commercial opportunities or the approval of business licenses or permits, for example. Here, GOL paid officials to exert legislative influence in a way that financially benefited the company."

These two new laws saved GOL almost $52 million: approximately $39.7 million in 2013 as a result of the payroll law and approximately $12.24 million from lower aviation fuel taxes.[10]

In addition to bribery charges, the SEC found that GOL failed to devise and maintain an adequate system of internal accounting controls. These insufficient internal controls resulted in payments to vendors involved in this bribe scheme even though most of the vendor's purported services were never rendered. Moreover, the vendor procurement process did not have an effective review process and instead relied primarily on the GOL director for authorization and verification of services rendered.[11]

The GOL Resolutions

To resolve DOJ's criminal case, GOL entered into a three-year DPA. GOL agreed to: (i) pay a criminal penalty of $17 million; (ii) continue cooperating with DOJ in any related ongoing or future criminal investigations; and (iii) continue enhancing its compliance program and, for the term of the DPA, reporting to DOJ regarding its remediation and enhanced compliance measures.[12] Additionally, GOL agreed to pay $24.5 million to resolve its civil case with the SEC.[13]

Both DOJ and the SEC fully credited GOL's cooperation with the investigations, which included timely and voluntarily providing the facts obtained through the company's internal investigation, translating documents, testing thousands of transactions, and making management available for interviews in the United States.[14]

GOL also received credit for its remedial efforts, which included an overhaul of its anti-corruption compliance program under new leadership, extensive assessment of the company's risks, and termination of any relationship with third parties involved in the bribery scheme.[15] In fact, DOJ determined that an independent compliance monitor was unnecessary because of GOL's remediation efforts and improvements to its compliance program.[16]

However, the DPA also noted that GOL did not receive voluntary disclosure credit and that the company previously had been subject to civil and regulatory actions, though not criminal ones.[17]

The DPA reflects that DOJ and GOL agreed that the appropriate criminal penalty for the company's violations is $87 million. Based on GOL's representations and supporting evidence that it was unable to pay this amount, DOJ – in accordance with its Inability to Pay Guidance[18] – determined that paying a criminal penalty greater than $17 million "would substantially threaten the continued viability of the Company."[19]

Similarly, the SEC's administrative order explains that the civil penalty imposed on GOL was not based on the $87 million criminal fine.[20] Although GOL owes a total of $70 million in disgorgement and prejudgment interest, given the company's representations and evidence about its financial condition, it will only be required to pay $24.5 million.[21]

In 2020, GOL reported its conduct to Brazil's Comptroller General's Office (Controladoria-Geral da Uniao or "CGU") and Attorney General's Office (Advocacia-Geral de Uniao or "AGU").[22] DOJ and the SEC each agreed to credit up to $1.7 million of GOL's penalty, for a total of $3.4 million, against the approximately $3.4 million fine levied against GOL by CGU under the Administrative Improbity Law.[23] In its leniency agreement with CGU, GOL also agreed to improve its compliance and governance policies, including internal controls.[24]

Key Takeaways

The GOL resolutions underscore several important reminders:

- Anti-bribery violations need not involve payments to government officials in exchange for particular commercial opportunities or the approval of business licenses or permits, for example. Here, GOL paid officials to exert legislative influence in a way that financially benefited the company. And the fact that the legislation would benefit other companies too provided no defense.
- DOJ's Inability to Pay Guidance remains operative and can reduce significantly the penalties a company ultimately pays. Even after a 25% reduction of the bottom of the applicable U.S. Sentencing Guidelines penalty range, GOL would have been required to pay $157 million to resolve its cases with both agencies. However, the company was permitted to pay a total penalty of $41.5 million – approximately one-fourth of what the agencies deemed to be "appropriate" penalties.
- Even though GOL did not self-report, DOJ did not to appoint a compliance monitor. This is likely due in part to the fact that the bribes at issue occurred almost a decade ago and were not pervasive. Significantly, the company also invested significantly in revamping its compliance program. As DOJ announced on the same day as GOL's resolutions, while voluntary self-disclosure is one factor prosecutors should consider in assessing the need for a monitor, another involves whether, at the time of the resolution, the company has adequately tested its (enhanced) compliance program and internal controls.[25] Here, the passage of time between GOL's misconduct and the resolutions with U.S. and Brazilian authorities gave the company additional time both to improve and test its anti-corruption controls.[26]

- Although CGU and AGU investigated GOL for misconduct under both Brazil's Administrative Improbity Law and its Anti-Corruption Law, the fine levied stemmed only from the former. Nevertheless, recent amendments to the Administrative Improbity Law have resulted in a higher standard of proof, even than in criminal cases. This has made prosecution and enforcement under the law harder. It will be interesting to see, going forward, to what extent and for what purposes CGU and AGU rely on each of these laws.
- GOL's settlement involved the same agencies responsible for the Stericycle bribery settlement earlier this year, again demonstrating the strong relationships between U.S. and Brazilian anti-corruption agencies. Even with all the flux in Brazil, including the end of Lava Jato and the elections, there is no jurisdictional parallel when it comes to coordination with the U.S. authorities. Looking ahead, particularly given CGU's recent announcement about expanding its focus to corruption outside of Brazil,[27] the importance of the authorities' ongoing cooperation likely will continue to grow.

FinCEN Finalizes Landmark Beneficial Ownership Reporting Rule

On September 30, 2022, the U.S. Treasury Department's Financial Crimes Enforcement Network ("FinCEN") published its long-anticipated final rule (the "Final Rule") implementing the beneficial ownership information reporting requirements of the Corporate Transparency Act (the "CTA").[1] Under the Final Rule, which is the first of three rulemakings that FinCEN plans to undertake to implement the CTA, legal entities created or registered to do business in the United States will need to report beneficial ownership information into a centralized governmental database.

Tens of millions of legal entities, including certain holding companies, special purpose entities and investment vehicles, likely will be impacted by the Final Rule. The creation of a corporate registry at FinCEN signals a landmark change to U.S. corporate law, which international bodies have long criticized for insufficient transparency.

The Final Rule describes who must report beneficial ownership information, what information must be reported and when reports are due. As described in the preamble to the Final Rule, the requirements outlined in FinCEN's December 8, 2021 proposal (the "Proposed Rule") are being implemented largely as proposed, with a few modifications.[2]

The Final Rule is effective January 1, 2024, with reporting companies created or registered to do business before that date having until January 1, 2025 to file their initial reports. Importantly, the effective date specified in the Final Rule assumes that FinCEN will receive adequate funding to hire necessary staff to conduct outreach to stakeholders, design and build the secure database that will receive, store and maintain reported information and implement related rulemakings.

In this article, we describe the Final Rule's key provisions and implications for reporting entities and their owners, control persons and formation or registration agents.

FinCEN Finalizes Landmark Beneficial Ownership Reporting Rule

Background

The CTA requires various legal entities organized or registered to do business in the United States to report beneficial ownership information to FinCEN. The law also requires FinCEN to maintain a secure, nonpublic database of this information for use, under varying conditions, by national security, intelligence and law enforcement agencies, federal functional regulators and financial institutions.

The beneficial ownership reporting provisions of the CTA have been a particular focus of the Biden Administration and are expected to "help prevent drug traffickers, fraudsters, corrupt actors such as oligarchs, and proliferators from laundering or hiding money and other assets in the United States."[3] Recent attempts by Russian elites, state-owned enterprises and organized crime, as well as Russian government proxies, to use shell companies to evade sanctions on Russia "reinforce[] the point that abuse of corporate entities … presents a direct threat to the U.S. national security and the U.S. and international financial systems" and underscore the need for beneficial ownership reporting.[4]

Ultimately, the Final Rule allows the United States to join at least 30 countries that have some form of beneficial ownership registry, and U.S. efforts to collect beneficial ownership information are hoped to "spur similar efforts by foreign jurisdictions" to make it more difficult for bad actors to conceal their activities.[5]

Key Components Of The Final Rule

Who is required to submit beneficial ownership reports, and who is exempt?

- Reporting Companies. A "reporting company" under the Final Rule is either: (i) a domestic reporting company created by the filing of a document with a secretary of state or similar office under the law of a U.S. state or Indian tribe;[6] or (ii) a foreign reporting company formed under the law of a foreign country and registered to do business within the United States by the filing of a document with a secretary of state or similar office, in each case unless an exemption applies.[7] In this regard, the Final Rule adopts the Proposed Rule's definition of reporting company and exemptions from the reporting requirements without significant changes.

- Exemptions. The Final Rule exempts 23 types of entities, as specifically set out in the CTA, from the definition of reporting company. FinCEN noted in the preamble to the Final Rule that the definition of reporting company is broad, that the 23 exemptions are "carefully circumscribed" and that any expansion of these exempt categories would require "consultation and specific findings that [beneficial ownership] reporting would not be highly useful" to law enforcement.[8] The exemptions remain largely unchanged from the Proposed Rule, with only a few minor modifications.

  Exempt entities include publicly traded companies; banks; bank holding companies; money services businesses registered with FinCEN; broker-dealers registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission; SEC-registered investment advisers ("RIAs") and investment companies; securities exchanges, clearing agencies and other entities registered with the SEC or the Commodity Futures Trading Commission (the "CFTC"); and operating companies with more than 20 full-time employees, annual gross receipts or sales of greater than $5 million and an operating presence at a physical office in the United States.

"Under the Final Rule, … legal entities created or registered to do business in the United States will need to report beneficial ownership information into a centralized governmental database."

Certain pooled investment vehicles ("PIVs") operated or advised by RIAs and other exempt financial institutions also are exempt. However, FinCEN declined to extend the PIV and RIA exclusions to certain related entities, as described below. FinCEN also declined to exempt from the reporting requirements intermediate holding companies established by foreign banks that are not bank holding companies, commodity pools that are operated by CFTC-registered commodity pool operators or advised by CFTC-registered commodity trading advisors, family offices, state-registered money services businesses and entities registered in jurisdictions where beneficial ownership information is readily accessible, among other exemptions requested by commenters on the Proposed Rule.[9] FinCEN stated in the preamble to the Final Rule that it will continue to consider potential exemptions, including the extent to which certain entities may already report their beneficial owners to the federal government through means other than the CTA.[10]

- No Exemption Certification Requirement. The Final Rule does not require exempt entities to file a form or obtain an exemption certificate to claim an exemption.

What about subsidiaries?

- Subsidiary Exemption. Entities whose ownership interests are controlled or wholly owned, directly or indirectly, by one or more of 18 exempt entity types are exempted from the definition of reporting company.[11] The preamble to the Final Rule suggests that the concept of control set out in the CTA, as discussed below, would apply for purposes of considering whether an entity qualifies for this exemption.
- No Expansion Beyond Proposal. Commenters to the Proposed Rule had requested that FinCEN expand the exemption to include companies holding only exempt entities and subsidiaries majority owned by exempt entities, but FinCEN declined to do so.
- Further, PIVs are not among the exempt entities whose ownership or control may serve to exempt an entity from beneficial ownership reporting requirements. Thus, a PIV's ownership of a downstream legal entity will not per se exempt the downstream entity from reporting.[12]

Are pooled investment vehicles and other entities in a fund structure exempt?

- Scope of PIV Exclusion. The Final Rule exempts from the reporting company definition certain PIVs operated or advised by RIAs or other specified exempt entities.[13] A "pooled investment vehicle" for this purpose is: (i) any investment company under the Investment Company Act of 1940 (the "Investment Company Act"); or (ii) any company that would be such an investment company but for the exclusion in section 3(c)(1) or 3(c)(7) of the Investment Company Act and that is

12. In this scenario, it may be the case that the relevant RIA exercises "control" over the downstream entity's ownership interests, in which case the downstream entity may qualify for the subsidiary exclusion from reporting. However, such an analysis would necessarily depend on the applicable facts and circumstances and further analysis of the Final Rule.

identified by its legal name in the applicable RIA's Form ADV filed with the SEC or that will be so identified in the next annual updating amendment.[14]

This language represents a modification from the proposed rule text in response to comments from industry participants, who sought clarification that an RIA's creation of a new PIV will not require an update to the RIA's Form ADV in order for the PIV to qualify for the reporting exclusion. FinCEN agreed that it would be impracticable for an RIA to update its Form ADV in a manner inconsistent with existing SEC requirements for the sole purpose of establishing an exemption for a newly formed PIV, and accordingly modified the rule text to clarify that a PIV may qualify for the exclusion even if it is not yet identified on the Form ADV, provided that it will be so identified in the next annual updating amendment.[15]

- Application to PIV-Related Entities. Under FinCEN's customer due diligence ("CDD") rule, some market participants have taken the position that all entities within a PIV structure are ultimately operated or advised by the RIA and therefore qualify for the PIV exclusion under that rule. Because the CTA defines a PIV as one that is identified by its legal name in the RIA's Form ADV, many in the industry sought clarification from FinCEN as to the applicability of the PIV exemption to different upstream and downstream entities in a fund structure.

  FinCEN acknowledged in the preamble to the Final Rule that a fund structure may, for example, contain different entities that are wholly owned by exempt PIVs, such as subsidiary legal entities created to effect specific investments or acquisitions.[16] However, FinCEN explicitly declined to provide a "blanket" exemption for all entities related to a PIV or subsidiaries of a PIV.[17] Rather, FinCEN stated that whether these entities are exempt from reporting requirements will depend on whether they themselves meet the criteria of an exemption. Thus, the specific facts and circumstances will need to be considered in determining whether an entity within a fund structure qualifies for an exclusion from reporting requirements.

- Reporting for Foreign PIVs. WAs supported by commenters, the Final Rule retains language making clear that a foreign PIV may only be required to report beneficial ownership information if it is registered with a state or tribal jurisdiction and therefore qualifies as a reporting company.[18]

What information must be reported?

The Final Rule requires each reporting company to submit to FinCEN information about: (1) each individual who is a beneficial owner; (2) company applicants; and (3) the reporting company itself.

Who are a reporting company's "beneficial owners"?

- Under the Final Rule, the term "beneficial owner" is defined as any individual who, directly or indirectly: (i) exercises "substantial control" over a reporting company; or (ii) owns or controls at least 25% of the ownership interests of the company.[19] FinCEN made some clarifications to the concepts underlying the beneficial owner definition but largely adopted the definition as proposed.
- Substantial Control. The Final Rule lists various activities that could constitute the exercise of substantial control, including service as a senior officer of the reporting company and direction, determination or substantial influence over important decisions made by the reporting company. These "important decisions" include decisions regarding the nature, scope and attributes of the company's business, transfers of principal assets, major expenditures or investments, entry into or termination of significant contracts and other examples provided in the Final Rule.[20] The definition also includes a catch-all provision stating that substantial control can be found in other forms not specifically listed.

  The Final Rule notes that substantial control may be exercised through various means, including board representation, ownership or control of a majority of the voting power or voting rights and control over intermediary entities that exercise substantial control.[21] FinCEN added language to the regulatory text to underscore that a trustee can exercise substantial control over a reporting company through the types of relationships outlined in the rule.[22]

19. 31 CFR 1010.380(d). The Final Rule contains five exceptions to the definition of beneficial owner: (1) a minor child, provided that a parent's or guardian's information is reported; (2) an individual acting as nominee, intermediary, custodian or agent on behalf of another individual; (3) an individual acting solely as an employee of a reporting company in specified circumstances (provided that the employee is not a senior officer); (4) an individual whose only interest in a reporting company is a future interest through a right of inheritance; and (5) a creditor of a reporting company, as defined by FinCEN. 31 CFR 1010.380(d)(3); 87 Fed. FinCEN Finalizes Landmark Beneficial Ownership Reporting Rule

The Final Rule differs from the CDD rule in requiring reporting with respect to all individuals with control over a reporting company. FinCEN noted in the preamble to the Final Rule that requiring reporting of all control persons will provide law enforcement with a more complete picture of who makes important decisions at a reporting company.[23]

- Ownership Interests. The term "ownership interests" is defined broadly and includes equity interests, capital or profit interests, convertible instruments (regardless of whether characterized as debt) and puts, calls or other options.[24] The definition also includes a catch-all provision for other instruments, arrangements or mechanisms used to establish ownership.

"The creation of a corporate registry at FinCEN signals a landmark change to U.S. corporate law, which international bodies have long criticized for insufficient transparency."

The Final Rule specifies that an individual may own or control an ownership interest in a reporting company through various means, including: joint ownership; through another individual acting as nominee, intermediary, custodian or agent; as a trustee, beneficiary, grantor or settlor of a trust in certain circumstances; and through ownership or control of intermediary entities.[25] The Final Rule also adds provisions for the calculation of ownership interests.[26]

Who are "company applicants"?

- Company Applicant. The Final Rule defines the term "company applicant" to mean the individual who directly files the document that creates or first registers a reporting company and the individual who is primarily responsible for directing or controlling such filing.[27]

- Reporting Related to Company Applicants. The Final Rule requires reporting companies created or registered after the effective date of the regulations to report information about company applicants. In response to comments related to the burdens associated with reporting such information, the Final Rule removes the requirement that companies with an obligation to report company applicant information keep such information updated in their filings with FinCEN. The Final Rule also removes the requirement that entities created or registered before the effective date report information for company applicants.

What should be included in a beneficial ownership report?

- The Final Rule requires beneficial ownership reports to include the information described below, which is largely as proposed.
- Required Information for Reporting Company. The Final Rule requires each reporting company to include in its beneficial ownership report its full legal name; any trade or "doing business as" names; the street address of its principal place of business in the United States (or, if not applicable, street address of the primary U.S. location where it conducts business); its jurisdiction of formation (and, for a foreign reporting company, jurisdiction where it first registers to do business in the United States); and its Internal Revenue Service taxpayer identification number ("TIN") or, for a foreign reporting company that has not been issued a TIN, a foreign tax identification number and name of the issuing jurisdiction.[28]
- Required Information for Beneficial Owners and Company Applicants. For each beneficial owner and (as applicable) company applicant,[29] a reporting company must report the individual's full legal name; date of birth; complete current address (i.e., business street address for a company applicant who forms or registers the reporting company in the course of such individual's business and otherwise the individual's residential street address); a unique identifying number and issuing jurisdiction from a non-expired U.S. passport, state or local identification document, driver's license or foreign passport; and an image of the document from which the unique identifying number was obtained.[30]

28. 31 CFR 1010.380(b)(1)(i). The Proposed Rule allowed for Dun & Bradstreet Data Universal Numbering System numbers or legal entity identifiers to be reported instead of TINs. 87 Fed. Reg. at 59516-17. The Final Rule requires the collection of a TIN for the reporting company and does not allow these alternatives.
29. As noted above, reporting companies created or registered before January 1, 2024 are not required to report company applicant information. 31 CFR 1010.380(b)(2)(iv).

- No TIN Required for Individuals. The Proposed Rule would have permitted reporting companies to voluntarily report the TIN of any beneficial owner or company applicant with such individual's consent.[31] The Final Rule does not include this language, as FinCEN concluded that the benefits were likely to be limited given the voluntary nature of the reporting and that the reporting of TINs would heighten privacy concerns and cybersecurity and operational risks.[32]

What is the FinCEN identifier, and how will it be used?

- FinCEN Identifier. An individual or reporting company may obtain a unique FinCEN identifier ("FinCEN ID") by submitting an application containing the information (as described above) that is required to be reported under the regulations.[33] Information submitted to FinCEN in connection with obtaining a FinCEN ID must be kept updated.[34]
- Use of FinCEN ID. An individual who obtains a FinCEN ID may provide this identifier to a reporting company, for use in the company's beneficial ownership reporting to FinCEN in lieu of the required information elements described above.[35] The Proposed Rule would have allowed a reporting company to report an intermediary company's FinCEN ID in lieu of beneficial ownership information about an individual who is a beneficial owner of the reporting company via the individual's interest in the intermediary.[36] The Final Rule does not adopt this proposed use of the FinCEN ID due to concerns about its potential application in ways that result in incomplete or misleading disclosures.[37] FinCEN intends to address these issues before the Final Rule goes into effect.

Are submissions to FinCEN required to be certified?

- Certification as to Accuracy; No Qualifiers. The Final Rule requires a certification that any report or application submitted to FinCEN is "true, correct, and complete."[38] FinCEN stated that the structure of the CTA reflects a deliberate choice to place on reporting companies the responsibility to identify beneficial owners and report information to FinCEN and, thus, FinCEN declined to apply a knowledge qualifier or other due diligence standard to the certification requirement.[39]

- However, FinCEN clarified in the preamble to the Final Rule that an inadvertent mistake by a reporting company acting in good faith after diligent inquiry would not be expected to constitute a willfully false or fraudulent violation for purposes of the civil and criminal penalty provisions.[40]
- Liability for Reporting Violations. FinCEN clarified in the preamble that, although an individual may file a report on behalf of a reporting company, the reporting company is ultimately responsible for the filing. Similarly, an individual who files a report as agent of a reporting company will certify on the reporting company's behalf, as the reporting company is responsible for making the certification.[41] That said, an individual could face liability for certain reporting violations, including a reporting company's willful failure to report complete or updated beneficial ownership information that: (i) is caused by such individual; or (ii) occurs when the individual is a senior officer of the reporting company at the time of the failure.[42]

"Ultimately, the Final Rule allows the United States to join at least 30 countries that have some form of beneficial ownership registry, and U.S. efforts to collect beneficial ownership information are hoped to 'spur similar efforts by foreign jurisdictions' to make it more difficult for bad actors to conceal their activities."

When must reports be filed?

- Filing Timeline and Trigger. The Final Rule clarifies the trigger for filing an initial report and provides for filing within 30 days for newly created or registered entities, instead of the originally proposed 14-day timeframe.[43] The trigger for an initial report for a reporting company created or registered to do business after the effective date of the Final Rule (i.e., January 1, 2024) is the earlier of: (i) the date on which the reporting company receives actual notice that its creation or registration has become effective; or (ii) the date on which a secretary of state or similar office first provides public notice that the company has been created or registered to do business.[44] Any entity created or registered to do business before January 1, 2024 must file an initial report by January 1, 2025.[45]

- Loss of, or Eligibility for, Exemption. Any entity that no longer meets the criteria for an exemption must report beneficial ownership information to FinCEN within 30 days after the date that it no longer qualifies for the exemption.[46] (Conversely, a reporting company that meets the criteria for an exemption after its filing with FinCEN must file an updated report indicating that it is no longer a reporting company.)[47]

What happens if reported information is incorrect or changes?

- Updates. Reporting companies must update reports for any changes to required information previously submitted to FinCEN within 30 days after the date on which the change occurs.[48] This includes changes with respect to who is a beneficial owner and changes in reported information for any particular beneficial owner. There is no materiality threshold, and thus any change in required information must be reported.[49] The image of an identifying document submitted to FinCEN also must be updated if there is a change with respect to the name, date of birth, address or unique identifying number of the relevant individual.[50]
- Corrections. If a report was inaccurate when filed and remains inaccurate, the Final Rule requires that the reporting company file a corrected report within 30 calendar days after the date on which the company becomes aware or has reason to know of the inaccuracy.[51] This is a slight modification to the originally proposed 14-day timeline.[52]

- Safe Harbor for Corrected Reports. Corrected reports filed within the 30-day period specified above will be deemed to satisfy the statutory safe harbor for persons who inadvertently report inaccurate information to FinCEN if filed within 90 days after the date on which the inaccurate report was filed.[53] Some commenters requested clarification that the safe harbor applies if a corrected report is filed within 90 days from the date on which the reporting company becomes aware or has reason to know of the inaccuracy. Based on the statutory text, FinCEN declined to modify the regulation to provide this clarification.[54]

Will there be a system to maintain beneficial ownership information?

- Beneficial Ownership System and Reporting. To implement the CTA's beneficial ownership information reporting requirements, FinCEN has been developing the Beneficial Ownership Secure System ("BOSS") to receive, store and maintain collected information.[55] FinCEN expects that beneficial ownership reports will be submitted electronically to the BOSS through an online interface.
- Related Rulemaking. Regulations governing the disclosure of collected information to authorized recipients and requiring such recipients to safeguard beneficial ownership information will be forthcoming.

When is the Final Rule effective?

- Effective Date. The Final Rule will be effective January 1, 2024, with reporting companies created or registered to do business before that date having until January 1, 2025 to file their initial reports.

  FinCEN adopted this effective date based on several factors, including the time needed for secretaries of state and tribal authorities to understand the new requirements and to update documentation to notify reporting companies of the new obligations; for small businesses and other reporting companies to receive notice of and comply with the new rules; and for FinCEN to take steps to design and build the BOSS and to work with stakeholders to ensure a thorough and complete understanding of the rules.[56]

- Effectiveness Dependent on FinCEN Budget Increase. Notably, FinCEN stated in the preamble to the Final Rule that the effective date necessarily depends on FinCEN's receipt of adequate funding to hire staff in order to conduct outreach to stakeholders, design and build the BOSS and implement related rulemakings. If FinCEN's requested budget increase is not provided, FinCEN may need to adjust its implementation and outreach plans.[57]

Next Steps

As noted above, the Final Rule is one of three required rulemakings to implement the CTA. FinCEN will address separately the protocols for access to and disclosure of the beneficial ownership information reported to FinCEN and revisions to the CDD rule that took effect in 2018. FinCEN intends to propose and finalize the rulemaking governing access to beneficial ownership information by the Final Rule's effective date, and FinCEN noted in the preamble to the Final Rule the CTA requirement that FinCEN rescind the specific beneficial ownership identification and verification requirements of the CDD rule (while retaining the general requirement for financial institutions to identify and verify the beneficial owners of legal entity customers) within one year after the effective date of the reporting rule (i.e., by January 1, 2025).

FinCEN continues to note that the CTA requires the CDD rule revisions to, in part, account for financial institutions' access to beneficial ownership information reported to FinCEN "in order to confirm the beneficial ownership information provided directly to the financial institutions."[58] As we have noted previously, any requirement that financial institutions obtain beneficial ownership information from reporting companies before they can access the BOSS could potentially limit financial institutions' interest in using the database and may not serve to reduce burdens on reporting companies, contrary to the objectives of the CTA. It remains to be seen how FinCEN will balance these interests and how the Final Rule will affect and interact with the CDD rule's requirements.

In addition to the two related rulemakings described above, FinCEN is expected to draft and issue guidance and frequently asked questions, prepare forms and instructions and engage with various stakeholders regarding the Final Rule and the rulemakings to come.

For now, organizations should consider whether entities within their structures (whether currently existing or of a type that may be created in the future) may fall within the definition of reporting company and should work on developing policies, procedures and controls to: (i) identify reporting companies; (ii) identify and obtain information from beneficial owners and company applicants; (iii) prepare and file beneficial ownership reports; and (iv) ensure identification and filing of timely updates and, as applicable, corrections to information filed with FinCEN.
